PhD Research Work

Title	Analysis of Life Time Distributions under Multicomponent Stress-Strength Parameters
Supervisor	Dr. Yogesh Mani Tripathi
Description	During my Ph.D., I have considered making statistical inferences for unknown quantities of multicomponent stress-strength models set up for a different lifetime distribution with support on a bounded interval. A finite number of test units is put into operation in a life testing experiment, and under some given operating conditions, failure times of units are recorded. Sampling schemes include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>○ Complete sampling.</li><li>○ Type-I censoring (test continues until a prefixed time point is reached).</li><li>○ Type-II censoring (trial continues till a prefixed number of failure times recorded).</li></ul> also, I have derived different inferential results from setting up the following lifetime distributions: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. Generalized Rayleigh Distribution</li><li>2. Inverse exponentiated distributions</li><li>3. Gompertz Distribution under Progressive Type-II Censoring</li><li>4. Generalized-Rayleigh distributions</li><li>5. Extensive discussions are made under various sampling schemes, such as progressive type-II censoring, progressive interval censoring, and generalized progressive hybrid censoring, and such censored data frequently appeared in applications</li><li>6. Statistical methods employed include frequentist and Bayesian approaches for point estimators of multicomponent stress-strength reliability, bootstraps, and Monte Carlo simulations for comparing various point and interval estimators. Moreover, some actual data illustrations are presented</li></ol>
Applications of my Ph.D. work	In reliability modeling and statistical inference, in industries such as reliability and life testing experiments.
